ABOUT THE SEMINAR | Globalization and liberalization of trade and business have resulted in many products and services being available to consumers. This has necessitated giving high priority for protection of consumers and promotion of responsible consumer movement in the country. In light of the experience gained through the working of the consumer fora, important changes in the existing legal regime - substantive and procedural- are required with a view to make the consumer justice delivery system efficient, effective and economical. There is also an urgent need to address the challenges posed by e-commerce and direct selling. E-commerce has potential to improve consumer welfare by making a wider range of products available, boosting price and quality competition besides developing new markets but at the same time it also brings significant new challenges for consumers, businesses and consumer protection authorities. This requires a departure from traditional modes of regulation.

Protection of consumer interests has also been one of the major objectives of the sectoral regulators such as SEBI, TRAI, RBI, IRDA, PNGRB, FSSAI etc. Besides, the Competition Commission of India (CCI) has also been set up by the Parliament as a market regulator for protection of consumer interests. However, such sectoral regulators have overlapping jurisdictions with CCI on certain occasions resulting into constant turf wars leading to conflicts in the enforcement mechanism. As such, it is imperative that a mechanism is put in place for regulatory coordination and cooperation so that the avowed objectives of the respective statutes are not frustrated due to such conflicting and overlapping jurisdictions which may result in harm to consumers' interests.

Even after over 25 years of enactment of the Consumer Protection Act, 1986, the law has not been able to achieve its avowed mandate of providing better protection of consumer interests in full measure. It is high time that suitable amendments are effected in the extant legal regime to effectively meet the challenges thrown by consumerism and newer emerging markets and business models.

It is hoped that conducting a discussion amongst legal luminaries, academics, members of Voluntary Consumer Organizations (VCOs) and enforcement agencies during the proceedings of the seminar would be fruitful at a time when the Government is endeavouring to amend the Consumer Protection, 1986. The seminar seeks to distillate the experience and suggestions of various stakeholders in preparing a database for the lawmakers and policy planners to appropriately amend the law and policies to address the concerns.
