Research Project Writing

NATIONAL LAW UNIVERSITY, DELHI
Excelsior - Ever upwards is our motto
Of late, considerable emphasis is being placed on the application of empirical methods in legal research. However, legal research in India has not kept up with this development. There is a general lack of priority in promoting research skills amongst students pursuing graduate and post graduate courses in law. This is despite the fact that research skills are recognized as one of the core requirements for law students. The main predicament in this direction is noted to be the lack of right kind of training on the part of students and teachers. Most law schools expect students to undertake research projects as a part of their curriculum. However, there is often a lack of clear cut scheme, guidance, material and competence in the entire process of undertaking, guiding, and evaluating research projects. There is hardly any concise and agreeable material available which could resolve the queries of young students in planning and presenting their research in an efficient manner. This situation has largely fostered an attitude of indifference among students towards research assignments. Resultantly the overarching objective of promoting a culture of research in law schools remains a distant dream.

True to its mission, the National Law University, Delhi (NLUD) places considerable emphasis on Empirical Legal Research (ELR) and aspires to be identified as a world class research university. In pursuance of these objectives, the NLUD, in the recent past, has undertaken several initiatives including the organization of specific workshops on empirical legal research methods and has trained a large number of teachers across the country to be able to emphasise research skills among students.

In the same vein, it was considered that NLUD may develop a reference handbook for simplifying the process of undertaking research projects. I am elated to introduce this ‘Handbook for Research Project Writing’. This reads as a manual and is tailored to the needs of young students planning to write project reports. The Handbook includes a step by step learning of both- doctrinal and non-doctrinal research. Concise and crisp, it offers useful illustrations and sample writings to understand the application of research method in realistic way. Further, it has many standard templates to bring uniformity in structuring project reports in terms of proper shaping of the cover page, contents and other parts. An easy to understand account of citation is also the key highlight of this publication.

I am sure this publication will bring much-needed standardization in the whole process of writing of project reports by law students. I expect students to make its fullest possible use. I also welcome suggestions from all quarters to further improve this publication.

Using the Handbook

The Handbook in your hands is a ready reference as to how to handle various research assignments given to the law student as part of the curriculum. This Handbook is an answer for the following exercises:

1. Writing synopsis for doctrinal/non-doctrinal research project
2. Planning and execution of non-doctrinal or empirical research project
3. Writing the report for non-doctrinal or empirical research project
4. Learning about the style and application of citation
5. Writing synopsis for doctrinal research project
6. Planning and execution of doctrinal research project
7. Writing the report for doctrinal research
8. Writing research proposal
9. Adherence to the format – structure, spacing, presentation and following the correct sequencing
10. Applying the templates given for perfecting the component wise research writing
11. Understanding and applying a suitable framework for analysing the cases and undertaking case analysis

¹The term doctrinaire or non-doctrinaire is also used. However, this Handbook relied on doctrinal and non-doctrinal terminology as the same is found to be widely prevalent and internationally used and accepted.
Guidelines for Writing Research Project

The Project Report writing as an essential part of B.A. LL. B. (Hons.) & LL. M. levels require to follow a definite research design. The choice of research design and method of research in law is based on the nature of research, content and other parameters. Broadly speaking, the research undertaken by the students could be of two kinds: doctrinal and non-doctrinal. A doctrinal research means a study that has been carried out on a legal proposition or propositions by way of analyzing the existing statutory provisions and cases by applying the reasoning power. Doctrinal research involves analysis of case law, arranging, ordering and systematizing legal propositions and study of legal institutions through legal reasoning or rational deduction. The method applied in this kind of study is qualitative and it is also known as non-empirical research as it is based on secondary sources. Empirical research is an inquiry that attempts to discover and verify general rules allowing us to understand why human beings or events behave the way they do. The methods like observation, interview, questionnaire, survey and case study are used to discover the human conduct. Socio-legal research is the best example of empirical or non-doctrinal research.

While very precise guidelines are provided in the next section to guide the students very generally in applying appropriate research methods, the students are advised to consult standard books to further explore these aspects. Besides, some peculiar research may need specific methodology or a combination of methods suggested in this section. In all such cases, the candidate may seek specific guidance from the concerned teacher/supervisor to approach the problem.
Guidelines for Writing Empirical Research Project

Title
The title especially, in empirical project should, reflect the focus of research problem in specific terms. Avoid writing too broad and general title like ‘Crime against women in India’ instead it, depending upon the focus, may be like: ‘Domestic Violence against Working Women in the Districts of Indore & Bhopal of M.P.’

Structure of Project Report
If the candidate is to write the synopsis or proposal for research, the structure suggested below may be followed and use future or simple present tense (e.g. ....the present study examines...../or the present study will examine...). If the candidate has completed the research and is writing the report past tense should be used which is suitable to report the findings made by the researcher/scholar. (e.g. the research found that....).
The research proposal / synopsis / or the report may be organised in the following manner:

1. Introduction
State a brief background and introduce the subject in few paragraphs or pages; it should not be directly lifted from the original source. Make your arguments and adopt an analytical tone to place the problem under investigation in a context.

Review of Literature
It is a survey of juristic writings on the chosen topic. Consult the literature viz; articles, books, reports, cases, monographs, data bases on the broad theme to highlight:

• general development in the field [ascending order in terms of year of publications];
• noteworthy contribution in the field expressed through various writings;
• connect and place the proposed subject of study in literature review to highlight its relevance.
2. Present Study

A. Statement of the Problem: (At least 200 words)

Clearly state the problem to be undertaken. Make a clear statement/narrative highlighting the exact coverage and purview of the problem under investigation. Make a mention of the issues, which would be actually investigated in the research. The key issues about the problem in theoretical and applied context of the concerned discipline should be specified. The specific aim of the project, its rationale, including the rationale of the approach adopted for studying the problem should be specifically mentioned. (Refer to Annexure – X for template).

B. Conceptual Context:

There may be concepts, propositions and doctrines in the proposed study, which need to be defined for the purpose of the study in hand. Make operational definitions of all such usages.

The scholar is expected in this section to introduce and contextualize the ‘general research area’. Such contextualization is to provide the researcher an opportunity to link a specific social and legal problem to a body of socio-legal theory.

3. Methodology:

A. Objectives:

State categorically the measurable objectives (preferably not more than five) of the research to be undertaken. Example:

1. To study the available infrastructure and manpower to enforce labour law in the city of Chandigarh.

2. To examine the factors (social and economic) in child labour etc.

B. Hypothesis/Research questions:

Make crisp statements (e.g. one each for all objectives) entailing not more than two variables describing the presumed relationship or influence on each other (‘length of experience of judge is positively linked with his capacity to dispose the cases’, ‘relaxation in regulatory mechanism in international trade sector caused a spurt in economic crimes’). Additionally or alternatively, research questions may also be framed to investigate the issues slated for the research. Hypotheses are advisable where the researcher has fairly good idea of issues, concepts and their relevance to the proposed research.
Research questions could be helpful where the researcher does not have sufficient idea of the work done in that area or the nature of issues under research are only evolving. Example:

- Does child labour has anything to do with the education? or;
- Does the type of parenting has any association with the indulgence of a child in to labour situation?

(c) Coverage & Scope: The duration or number of cases and nature of cases studied; or any geographical region (city, villages etc.) or any institution (like case study of Economic Offence Wing etc.) studied.

(d) Sample: normally in non-doctrinal studies. Mention the sampling method used.

(e) Data Collection: All kinds of research (doctrinal or non-doctrinal) require some kind of data. Make a mention of sources and nature of data collected and utilized in the report. It may include the following:

Primary Data collection

If the study involves data collection from the respondents, following is the scheme:

- Universe of the study (state the source/estimated number of total population of units)
- Sampling design (method of sampling to extract the required number of sample)
- Tools used (the ways to collect the required data like interview schedule, questionnaire, participant observation, case study)
- Techniques (any scale, measurement etc.)
- Statistical consideration/software applications.

Nature of data that are proposed to be collected should be specifically mentioned. The sources for each type of data and the tools and techniques that will be used for collecting different types of data should also be specifically mentioned. For questionnaire and/or interview schedule to be used, the following should be indicated:

(a.) Nature and coverage of the questionnaire or interview schedule to be used for different sections of respondents.
(b.) Number of questions to be asked from each respondent
(c.) Scaling technique proposed to be included, if any
(d.) Projective tests incorporated in the questionnaire/interview schedule, if any
(e.) Coding plan (e.g., whether the questions/ responses/ items will be pre-coded or not; if coding is required, mention whether it is to be done in computer or manually)

(f.) In case, interview technique is being adopted, please mention about how they are to be conducted, including the particular characteristics of the interviews/ interviewers

(g.) In case of observation technique, mention type of observation, participants, quasi-participants, non-participants; units of observation; or other techniques, if any.

If the study requires any control groups, these should be specifically mentioned therein.

Secondary Data collection (Both non-doctrinal and doctrinal study)

- Mention of Secondary sources used-library resources/reports consulted/internet resources used.
- Case studies.
- Case laws/judgments.
- Content analysis/document analysis/Meta-analysis.

4. Data Analysis Plan:

Data analysis could be manually or electronically. The use of IBM SPSS Statistics can be made to analyse the data collected from the respondents.

Refer to any particular qualitative/quantitative techniques which would be used in this study.

5. Significance of the study

Clearly state as to what theoretical, pragmatic and policy contribution would be made by the study. Make at least four to five substantial statements in this section.

6. References

Follow the standard referencing and citation (Follow the ‘Blue Book citation style)

1Keep the tense in mind; if writing a proposal use future tense and if writing the report, use the past tense.

Guidelines for Doctrinal Research Project

Doctrinal research is a qualitative enquiry. The choice and coverage of doctrinal legal research could be very expansive and it is tough to suggest any fixed format for this kind of research. This is mainly due to the reasons that this kind of research involves research problem requiring highly individualized rather than standard methodology. For instance, the research involving case study method or focusing on case analysis including case comment may have little different frame to follow.

The research involving jurisprudential analysis of an issue, analysis of statute, historical or comparative growth of any legal doctrine or legal system, examination of any legal concept through case laws or legal theories, regulatory issues in corporate or IPR regimes, locating and weighing an idea in the constitutional context or human rights context, enforcement issues in various jurisdictions, international laws affecting the relevant domestic issue etc. are some examples of some broad areas of research which are possible through doctrinal research design.

Steps for Doctrinal Design

1. Introduction
State a brief background and introduce the subject in few paragraphs or pages; it should not be directly lifted from the original source. Make your arguments and adopt an analytical tone to place the problem under investigation in a perspective.

2. Conceptual context
There may be concepts, propositions and doctrines in the proposed study, which need to be defined for the purpose of the study in hand. Make operational definitions of all such usages.

The scholar in this section is expected to introduce and contextualize the ‘general research area’. Such contextualization is to provide the researcher an opportunity to link a specific social and legal problem to a body of socio-legal theory.
3. Review of literature
It is a survey of juristic writings on the chosen topic.
Consult the literature including articles, books, reports, cases, monographs, data bases) on the broad theme to highlight:
- general development in the field [ascending order in terms of year of publications];
- noteworthy contribution in the field expressed through various writings;
- connect and place the proposed subject of study in literature review to highlight its relevance.

4. Statement of research problem
Clearly state the problem to be undertaken. Make a clear statement/narrative highlighting the exact coverage and purview of the problem under investigation. Make a mention of the issues, which would be actually investigated in the research. The key issues about the problem in theoretical and applied context of the concerned discipline should be specified. The specific aim(s) of the project, its rationale, including the rationale of the approach adopted for studying the problem should be specifically mentioned. (Refer to annexure – X for template).

5. Formulation of objectives
State categorically the objectives (preferably not more than five) of the research to be undertaken. The objective to be stated sharply entailing the key issues to be examined (Annexure – XI).

6. Framing hypothesis / research questions
Hypothesis in doctrinal research must be framed to address of the prescribed objectives of the study. The hypothesis must depict the interplay of key issues, emerging debates, conflicting notions and evolving trends in the subject. Alternatively, research questions may be formed and these questions must lead the researcher to examine a definite body of literature, cases and publications etc.

7. Sampling procedures
The researcher to focus on the following-
- Choice of setting.
- Choice of key informants.
- Choice of study groups and events.
- Choosing the setting, the event and the respondent(s) to be addressed first, events and respondents will change as research progresses.
8. Tools for data collection

- Depending upon the subject the researcher can apply various tools like case study, case law analysis, analytical induction, constant comparison, textual analysis, content analysis etc. (Visit... http://psychsoma.co.za/files/15methods.pdf)

9. Data collection / Analysis

- Data collection and its analysis in a doctrinal study goes together where the identical information is combined from various sources to evolve certain patterns, categories and concepts. Under the teacher’s supervision, following scheme may be tried.

- Entering the setting, data gathering and open coding; examining and comparing the data; drawing inferences from the data, leading to identification of concepts; adding new data; refining concepts.

- Axial coding; integrating/re-integrating data and constructing categories. Inter-connecting, contextualizing categories, giving attention to causes and consequences; adding new data; comparing categories, formulating propositions².

- Selective coding; identifying the core category, relating it to other categories, validating their relationships, and further refining and developing them.

- Testing propositions/ hypotheses; theoretical saturation; leading to theory Recording and organizing data³.

Secondary Data collection

- Mention of Secondary sources used - library resources/reports consulted/ internet resources used.

- Case studies.

- Case laws/judgments.

- Content analysis/document analysis/Meta-analysis.

²Applicable in selected case where a rigid / fixed research design is contemplated.

10. Data analysis and interpretation are to be placed in various sections of the report.
   • Analyzing data by grouping the information and developing new categories.
   • Assigning meanings to the narratives.
   • Testing hypotheses.

11. Conclusions and Recommendations
   • This section must indicate the broad conclusions of the study. Also suggest major recommendations for improvement of the situation.

Doing Doctrinal Analysis

   • Assembling relevant facts
   • Identifying the legal issues
   • Analysing the issues with a view to searching for the law
   • Reading background material (including legal dictionaries, legal
   • Locating primary material (including legislation, delegated legislation and case law
   • Synthesising all the issues in context
   • Coming to a tentative conclusion

INTRODUCTORY SIGNALS [Rule 1.2]

(a) Signals that indicate support.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>[no signal]</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Cited authority (i) directly states the proposition, (ii) identifies the source of a quotation, or (iii) identifies an authority referred to in the text. Use “[no signal],” for example, when directly quoting an authority or when restating numerical data from an authority.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>E.g.,</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Cited authority states the proposition; other authorities also state the proposition, but citation to them would not be helpful or is not necessary. “E.g.” may also be used in combination with other signals, preceded by a comma:</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>See, e.g.,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>But see, e.g.,</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Accord</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>“Accord” is commonly used when two or more sources state or clearly support the proposition, but the text quotes or refers to only one; the other sources are then introduced by “accord.” Similarly, the law of one jurisdiction may be cited as being in accord with the law of another.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
See
Cited authority clearly supports the proposition. “See” is used instead of “[no signal]” when the proposition is not directly stated by the cited authority but obviously follows from it; there is an inferential step between the authority cited and the proposition it supports.

See also
Cited authority constitutes additional source material that supports the proposition. “See also” is commonly used to cite an authority supporting a proposition when authorities that state or directly support the proposition already have been cited or discussed. The use of a parenthetical explanation of the source’s relevance (rule 1.5) following a citation introduced by “see also” is encouraged.

Cf.
Cited authority supports a proposition different from the main proposition but sufficiently analogous to lend support. Literally, “cf.” means “compare.” The citation’s relevance will usually be clear to the reader only if it is explained. Parenthetical explanations (rule 1.5), however brief, are therefore strongly recommended.

A Model / Sample for Writing the Statement of Problem, Objectives, Hypothesis and Research Design etc.

Statement of Problem:

The present study intended to focus upon the issues and problems relating to witnesses of certain criminal offences. With the help of a doctrinal and, non-doctrinal method, the proposed exercise attempted to know as to why and in what circumstances the witnesses turn hostile. Are there any specific factors, which induce hostility of a witnesses? Do the incidents of cooperation or hostility tend to vary along the types and characteristics of witness? A systematic probe in to some of these questions has been made in the study. Besides, the study also endeavoured to find as to what are the key problems that the witness faces in his interaction with police, prosecution and court officials. The issues of hostility and protection have been examined in the light of significant judgments. The perceptions of witnesses on several crucial aspects have also been studied to project a comprehensive picture of the issue under study. Finally, the study also took a critical view of the need for witness protection and the suggestions made by certain bodies have been subjected to a critical review. The study has been geared by the key assumption that without resolving the basic issues and problems being faced by witnesses, their co-operation can not be elicited for the purpose of a free and fair trial.

Objectives:

• The study was geared to achieve the following objectives:
  • To outline the relevant legal provisions pertaining to witness
  • To examine the issue of hostility of witness and the emerging debates on the issue especially in the light of leading judgments of courts and other publications.
  • To study the experiences and problems of witnesses in their interaction with police, prosecution and court.
  • To critically review the idea of witness protection in the light relevant legal provisions.
• To study the profile of witnesses in the chosen states.
• To identify the causes for the reluctance of people being witness to a criminal incident in the context of the characteristics of the witnesses.
• To survey the perceptions and attitudes of witnesses on certain matters relevant to this study.

Hypotheses:
The following hypotheses would be examined in this study:

1. The chief factors in the reluctance of witness are those relating to fear of criminal assault, harassment by the police and court and anticipatory loss of degradation of social status.
2. The persons from lower medium income groups and average education category are more likely to be the witnesses.
3. The hardships of witnesses are normally associated with police behaviour.
4. The witnesses experience considerable problems in the court.
5. Loss of faith in the criminal justice agencies is a factor discouraging the witnesses to come forward.
6. Witnesses do face pressures from influential sectors affecting their testimony.
7. The chances of manipulation and resulted hostility of witnesses are often seen in cases where the rich and powerful elements are involved.

Research Design:
In accordance with the objectives of the present study, doctrinal and non-doctrinal research designs have been adopted. The doctrinal design has been used to study the jurisprudential development in the areas of hostility, protection and problems of witnesses. This has been done primarily with the help of case laws and leading judgments of various courts. The reports of committees and commissions have been scanned to sifting the issues relating to the research problem.

The non-doctrinal method or empirical approach is the prime highlight of this study. In this pursuit, a sample survey has been carried out to collect the required data by using some structured methods of data collection.
Sample & Locale of the Study:

In order to attain the suggested objectives, the witnesses relating to various types of criminal offences have been included in this study. They include:

(i) Theft
(ii) Personal violence
(iii) Robbery
(iv) Dacoity
(v) Attempted murder/murder
(vi) Rape

To have a suitable geo-cultural mix of the region, it was intended to have four districts one each from the states i.e. Madhya Pradesh, Rajasthan, Maharashtra, Karnataka. After the pilot study, it was decided to conduct the study on the capitals of the concerned State. A sample of two hundred from each state was proposed to be taken. The actual total sample size in the study was seven hundred and ninety eight (N=798). Several procedures of sampling were considered. It was indeed difficult to have a pre decided list of witnesses and then to contact them accordingly was practically difficult. Therefore, the study was conducted in an open setting. The research team would visit the court premises to contact the witnesses concerning the cases (according to the pre decided offences). This schedule was repeated daily until the desired number from each state was targeted. Though it was not always easy to contact and interview the witness waiting in the court premises, as the lawyers initially did not cooperate. Eventually, they were convinced and the research team received ample of help from them. The experiences in all the selected states were different. In order to meet the local demands like language etc. investigators were employed from the same region. Infact the witnesses used to have lot of free time after turning up to the court and hence the long interview did not face any problem.

Tools for Data Collection:

An Interview Schedule for collecting necessary information from the respondents was devised. As far as possible, all the items kept closed ended so that the respondents could easily answer. The aspects relating to the objectives of the study were properly included. A team of research investigators was deployed to contact the witnesses for eliciting requisite information. The job of data collection was accomplished with the help of local research investigators specially engaged for this purpose.

In addition to it, informal discussions with lawyers, prosecutors, police officials and judicial officers were held to gain insight into various aspects of the problem.
Data Analysis:
The collected data from the respondents were subjected to editing and a coding plan was carried out to facilitate electronic data processing. The data was processed through Statistical Package for Social Sciences (IBM SPSS Statistics 21). A tabulation plan suiting to the scheme of this study was worked out.

Findings & Observations
The key conclusions of this study are presented below:

1. Majority of the respondents in this study (61.7 percent) found the adjournments to be quite frequent. This perception was largely shared by respondents in Rajasthan (19.3 percent) followed by Karnataka (16.7 percent). The highest number of respondents not subscribing to this view came from Maharashtra (12.7 percent) whereas the lowest number in this category came from Rajasthan (0.9 percent).

2. The data reveal that almost 65 percent witness had to appear more than once before the court for testimony while 35.2 percent could do so in the first hearing only.

Writing Research Papers: 10 Top Tips

By Marshall B. Kapp
The Law Teacher (Fall 1999)

Virtually all law students write at least one legal research paper during their law school career, besides composing the usual array of briefs, memos, and legal instruments. In the experience of grading hundreds of legal research papers, I have accumulated an assortment of pet peeves and compiled a list of tips that other law teachers may find useful to share with their students at the outset of the writing endeavor. Most of these suggestions fall in the category of common sense, which is precisely why they need to be set forth explicitly. Here, I present my “top ten” list.

1. Analyze and synthesize; don’t just paraphrase.

Don’t thankfully latch onto one article directly on your topic, wish that you had written that very article, and then spend 25 pages just paraphrasing it, even with proper attribution (i.e., many footnotes, but most of them being id’s). In real legal practice, you will rarely be lucky enough to find one unassailable authority that conclusively and unarguably resolves your issue.

If you can find incontrovertible authority on “all fours” with your case, by all means rely on it.

Most of the time, however, the law has to progress by analysis that synthesizes, mainly through analogy and distinction, different pieces of a puzzle. Research papers should reflect that complex process.

2. Avoid sweeping generalizations unless you can back them up with authority.

Legal writing involves argument and persuasion based on a reasoning process beginning with supportable premises, not the mere assertion of a proposition. Statements such as “Congress should repeal the ERISA preemption because all HMO executives care only about the bottom line” may be a hit on the political campaign trail but detract markedly from credibility in legal writing, unless supporting sources can be cited.
3. Avoid the “obvious.”

Unless you are making a really unassailable proposition, such as “The earth revolves around the sun,” using terms such as “obviously,” “clearly,” “of course,” “unarguable,” “simply,” “certainly,” and “well known” raise enormous red flags for the reader. If you have authority for a proposition, cite it. If you don’t have any authority, perhaps the proposition is not as “obvious” as you thought. Besides, if your point is really that “obvious” to everyone, why waste time and space restating it? And, how can you be so sure that another lawyer won’t come along and disagree with the proposition that you thought was so “clear”? Similarly, terms such as “many,” “several,” “numerous,” “some,” and “widely held” raise flags unless there is citation to examples. Think about how you would respond to a reader who sees such a term used, questions your accuracy, and demands, “Name one!” If you cannot, your bluff has been successfully called.

5. Don’t apologize for your positions.

You rarely need to preface your statements with introductory quasi-apologies or such equivocations as “In my opinion,” “I think,” “I believe,” or “I feel.” First, the reader of legal writing really doesn’t care what the author “thinks,” “believes,” or “feels.” In this genre, the only things that matter are what you can prove or logically support through reasoned analysis and argument. Second, the reader automatically assumes that any proposition for which you do not cite authority must be your own opinion, so there is no need for the reminder. Just make your points and let them be evaluated for what they’re worth.

6. Any particular law in mind?

Avoid making broad statements such as “doing X is illegal” unless you can explain which specific statute, regulation, or common law rule is being violated, and why. Be especially cautious about making the claim that “doing X is unconstitutional” unless you can back up that claim with one or more constitutional clause(s).

7. Cite primary sources.

In a legitimate legal discussion, even the least strict constructionists at least begin by examining and citing the relevant law itself. Constitutional clauses, statutes, regulations, and judicial decisions are the primary building blocks of legal analysis; everything else is, literally, commentary. You can’t write a good legal research paper based solely on citations to secondary sources such as law review articles and textbooks. You have to begin with the actual law. Then, you can argue about interpretation. Legal readers, in the first instance, want to know what the law itself says, rather than what some law professor has to say.
8. No gratuitous comments.

Legal writing is not the place for gratuitous comments (e.g., “We should not forget that...”) or “Unfortunately, the court disagreed...”) or throwaway lines. Words are the attorney’s only tool, so law students must learn to write as though every statement counts. In the same vein, use of rhetorical questions (e.g., “Why, you might ask...”) should be minimized in legal writing, in favor of declarative statements. The reader wants to know your position on the issues, and providing your position as an answer to a rhetorical question may strike many readers as a bit condescending or patronizing.

9. Keep the tone serious.

Legal writing does not have to be somber and boring. Indeed, it ought to be creative and interesting. Creativity and provocation must take place, however, within a serious tone. Certain techniques that may fit well into certain other forms of writing (e.g., humor, rhetorical questions, a “whiz bang!!” feel) detract from the purpose of a legal research paper, which is to persuade the reader to agree with--and ultimately to act upon--your argument. The worst criticism that can be leveled against an attorney is “He/she is dishonest,” but the next most devastating is “He/she’s a joke.” An attorney is of little value to the client if others won’t take the attorney seriously, and law students should learn how to begin to earn that respect through their writing style.

In Evidence and elsewhere in the curriculum, law students learn about presumptions and burdens of proof. When it comes to evaluating a law student’s--and eventually a practicing attorney’s--writing and the arguments being made in that writing, most readers start with a presumption that sloppy writing (e.g., misspellings, erroneous punctuation, noun-pronoun disagreement, and grammatical mistakes) connotes sloppy thinking. Too many mechanical errors in a text can be so distracting that they obscure almost totally the argument the writer is trying to make. In today’s word-processing age, there is no excuse for turning in a paper that has not been thoroughly reviewed. The student can catch up on sleep after the paper has been submitted.
