ABOUT THE CENTRE FOR TRANSNATIONAL COMMERCIAL LAW (CTCL)

The Centre for Transnational Commercial Law at National Law University, Delhi was established in 2016 to advance the study and practice of transnational commercial law. TCL is an emerging area of law and policy necessitated by cross-border movement of people and business transactions. The Centre seeks to be a guiding factor in teaching, research and policy formulation. CTCL has been established with the aim of supporting an academic and policy interface. The foremost aim of the Centre is to provide a focal point for academics, practitioners and regulators through an interdisciplinary legal research. Research Projects, both fundamental and applied, training programmes, workshops/conferences, clinics and publications form some of the current activities. The Centre seeks to promote an environment for high quality research in all aspects of national, international, transnational, and comparative law. Consistent with this aim, CTCL actively engages in deliberations involving the Unification and Harmonization of International Private Laws along with the UNCITRAL, UNIDROIT, The Hague Conference and similar institutions & organizations. The Centre also aims to nurture and encourage the researchers of the future in this important area of law.

Dr. Risham Garg is the Director of the Centre for Transnational Commercial Law.

Course Overview

The Module “International Business Transactions”, is envisioned as the field of private business transactions that are international in character and that are governed by a blend of international private law and the private law aspects of public international law. International business transactions is a subject that, despite its practical usefulness and theoretical attractiveness, often falls betwixt and between. International business programs tend to regard it as a course for legal specialists; many law schools leave it to schools of business or position it as an advanced course in international law. As a result, few law and business students have been exposed to the course.

We believe that, in this era of globalization, a course in international business transactions is an essential part of the training of all business lawyers and of people in the corporate world as well. There is no longer a clear distinction between businesses that operate in India and those with foreign operations. Sooner or later, every successful business will have an international aspect. In the modern era, when trade and commerce have become truly global, international business transactions can no longer be viewed as being dominated by developed nations in North America and Europe. The increasing importance of developing nations, as well as the emergence of India, Korea, Japan, China and other Asian countries as economic powers, requires in-depth coverage of non-Western countries, regions, and cultures that were not traditionally covered in casebooks on international law and business, which were strongly oriented toward Western developed countries.

This course is a result of our consideration of these pedagogical issues focusing on the private transaction that we hope is not overly burdensome or taxing to students and professors. We have tried to keep the amount of material in the course to that which should be easily manageable in a ten to fifteen-hour course.

Course Objective:

The primary objectives of this course are as follows:

1. To introduce participants to the legal aspects of international business transactions.
2. To familiarize participants with international laws and conventions that govern international business transactions, and the relevant international and multilateral institutions.
3. To gain an understanding of case law analysis, through detailed discussions of judicial and arbitral decisions involving international business transactions.
4. To provide instruction on the importance of the contract—the agreement between the parties.
5. Examine the risks associated with international business transactions
6. Examine key elements and clauses in various types of international business transactions

7. To introduce dispute resolution mechanisms—negotiation, mediation, arbitration, litigation—used to resolve international business conflicts

Teaching Faculty

1. Professor Don S. De Amicis (DA)
2. Dr. Risham Garg (Host Faculty) (RG)

Teaching Method: The teaching method will be primarily via lecture. However, students will be expected to answer questions on assigned readings and to engage in discussion on the course materials. In particular, the assigned readings will include court decisions, arbitral awards, and hypothetical or practical problems that the students will be expected to analyse and discuss in class. The course will be primarily instructed by Professor Don De Amicis, who would be adequately backed up by suitable references from Indian Law by Dr. Risham Garg, the NLU Co-Faculty for the course.
