Date: 20- 25 January, 2022

‘Sustainable development’ is defined as the ‘development that meets the needs of the present while safeguarding Earth’s life-support system, on which the welfare of current and future generations depends.’¹ As per the new paradigm, the sustainable development should meet the needs of earth’s life support system, society and economy. The sustainable business development will accordingly include environment sustainability, social sustainability and economic sustainability for any business. It is imperative to mention here the Sustainable Development Goals which provide a “blueprint to achieve a better and more sustainable future for all” and the countries have to achieve such goals by 2030.²

Women as entrepreneurs or as business managers share the responsibility of adopting the sustainable business model. Broadly speaking, the business landscape of every country is shadowed by its legal and regulatory framework and policies for promotion of women’s role in business or in economic development of the country. Women empowerment has been the buzz word for more than one decade across the world under which efforts have been made by governments in providing support to women for their upliftment not only socially but in their entrepreneurial and other professional ventures.
