About CELPR

The Centre for Environment Law, Policy and Research, established in August 2016, seeks to promote legal education, research and extension activities in the field of Environmental Law. CELPR regularly hosts talks by eminent scholars on environmental issues, providing a platform for critical discussion and exchange of ideas. As a key objective, the Centre aims to support academic and policy-oriented dialogue that paves the way to critical insights and constructive outcomes in the area of environmental law.

NALT, NLU Delhi and CELPR invites applications for an online Faculty Development Programme (FDP) on Environmental Law and Policy.

This programme is designed to build capacity among legal educators and researchers by deepening their engagement with environmental law and policy. It aims to address both doctrinal and practical aspects of environmental regulation, while also exploring its evolving intersections with other domains of law and governance.

The FDP adopts an interdisciplinary approach, covering foundational, advanced, and emerging topics. In addition to core areas of environmental law, the programme also explores its interfaces with labour rights, corporate accountability, intellectual property, financial and tax regulation, sustainability practices and climate litigation.

The sessions will be led by a distinguished group of national and international experts.
